- 1. In the spring of 1950 the first class of trainees at the Chiamussu Air Force School was graduated. Of the 5,000 graduates, 4,000 were sent to Air Force units throughout China. An exception was made for 1,000 of the graduates who, having been found "pure in thought and physically strong", were sent to Moscow to learn to fly jet planes and to go through advanced flight training. In July 1951 about 200 of these special students returned from the USSR and were assigned to fly jets and other combat planes. Their low level of technical skill, however, was a source of considerable dissatisfaction to the Chinese Communist authorities at Peiping.
- 2. On October 1 the Chiamussu Air Force School received a directive stating that the second class of trainees, who had entered in January 1950, should be screened with particular emphasis on physical fitness and practical flying skill in order to raise the general level of their ability.
